a mass-produced purple skirt, thrown out along with similar items. Presumably, the disregarded options in an online shopping spree.

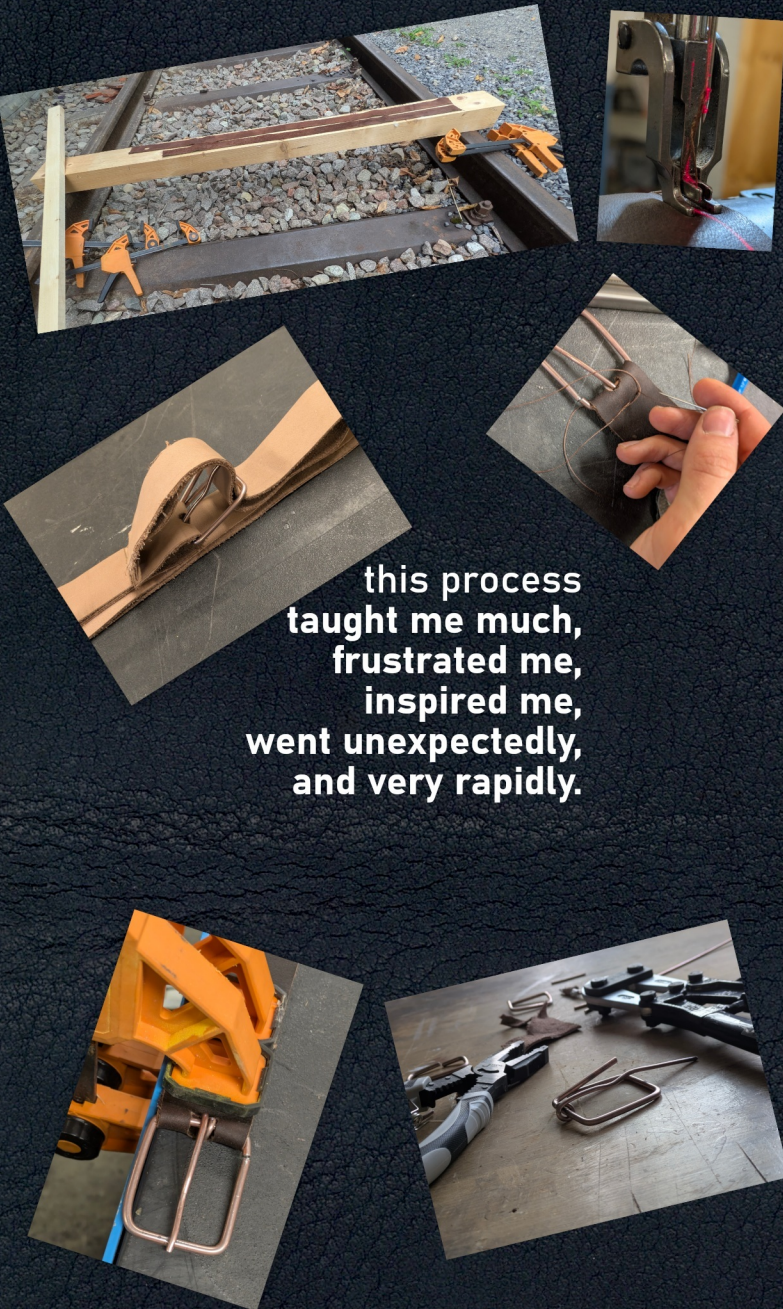

I found the materials for a project my grandma abandoned a long time ago, in her basement. She had planned make a collage using leather.

to show the contrast between fast fashion and a handmade piece, I decided to manufacture a belt out of this leather and a buckle out of a metal rod.

this process
taught me much,
frustrated me,
inspired me,
went unexpectedly,
and very rapidly.

I learned how to make
a belt.
The final result, ironically,
would not last long
if it was used as
a belt.
Thankfully, it does not need to be used.
This object is a piece of art,
the result and the showcase
of a process.
